COURSE DESCRIPTION

LPPL 4225 / ENGL 2559 is a required course for Fellows in the Meriwether Lewis Institute for Citizen Leadership. Through this seminar, the 3rd year Meriwether Lewis Fellows will develop and advance their impact on the University, analyze course readings, engage one another on leadership challenges, and begin translating the leadership skills they are learning to the broader world. The success of this course depends directly upon student engagement, curiosity, openness, and willingness to share.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

The primary objective of this seminar is to help you to apply leadership skills and lessons to enhance your impact at the University. Learning will come from many sources, including assigned readings, guests sharing their experiences, and engagement with each other. At times, we may alter the course calendar to allow time to react as a group to current events occurring at the University, in the nation, or in the world. Concepts covered in this course will be both immediately applicable and useful to you for many years to come. Key learning outcomes include:

- 1) Advancing individual and collective knowledge of leadership, both theoretical and practical;
- 2) Applying learning in real-time – focusing on the “so what;”

- 3) Articulating a practical guide for meaningful student engagement at the University.

STATEMENT OF EXPECTATIONS: ATTENDANCE AND ENGAGEMENT

We are looking forward to coming to class each week and hope you are, too. As a Cohort of Meriwether Lewis Fellows, you have the benefit of entering this seminar with a strong foundation of relationships with one another. For this reason, our expectations of engagement, trust, and personal risk-taking are higher than they would be in another course. Your learning in this seminar will depend heavily on the extent to which you are actively involved. Given that the course meets only once a week, attendance at all sessions is critical. Absences for legitimate reasons will be excused but need to be approved by the instructors ahead of time.

REQUIRED COURSE MATERIALS

1. Meditations by Marcus Aurelius
2. The Montgomery Bus Boycott and the Women Who Started It by Jo Ann Gibson Robinson

EVALUATION PROCEDURES AND GRADING CRITERIA

LPPL 4225 is a two-credit course that may be taken either credit/no-credit or for a grade. Students who attend the Civil Rights Tour of Montgomery, AL can earn a third credit by enrolling in a related independent study (their selected credit/no-credit or graded option for the two-credit course will apply to the independent study as well).

Required Work:

Ongoing Journal Contributions: Throughout the course of the semester, we will ask you to maintain ongoing contributions to an online ‘journal’ that will allow you to reflect on how you applied a concept, topic, or reading from the course in your lives as students and leaders at the University. Every week we expect two submissions: (1) your own journal entry (approx. 250 words) and (2) a response to another student’s entry.

You can find this ‘journal’ under the Forum tab on our Collab site. Your contributions will be read by your fellow classmates as well as the instructors, and insights or themes that emerge from your entries may be used as helpful contributions to future class discussions. Your weekly entry will be due every Thursday at midnight, and your responses must be posted before noon on Monday.

Class Participation: Your participation in this seminar is critical, both to your own learning and to that of your peers. You will be expected to come to class having completed all required reading and ready to participate in lively discussion. We will assign Fellows to serve as discussion leaders each week to help facilitate class sessions.

Meaningful Engagement Presentation and Write-up: In the final weeks of class, each of you will turn in a summary write up and deliver a brief presentation to the class stating your intentions for meaningful engagement in University life in the year ahead. We will discuss the specifics of this assignment as the semester progresses.

Breakdown of Graded Elements: 2-Credit Option

Ongoing Journal Contributions	35% of final grade
Class Participation (Ongoing)	40% of final grade
Meaningful Engagement Presentation and Write-up (Due April 15 for Group A, April 22 for Group B)	25% of final grade
